Miss Stockdell's School of Singing 400 North Lombardy Street

Meaning a group of teachers capable of instructing in | the art of singing from the foundation of singing by note up to the culture of the voice in song, it gives me great pleasure to be able to announce such a school at last, after many years of striving to that end.

For four years past I have been training certain pupils in the For loar years past I have been training certain pupils in the science of reading music from a printed page without aid of any instrument whatever. These pupils are now ready to take charge of the Sight-Singing Department of my school, having passed a rigid examination of twenty test questions

Miss Adriana Kuyk, daughter of the Miss Sallie Cabell Jones. Miss Jones, after graduating from Westminster School, began the study of singing and sight-singing with such zeal and industry that late Rev. C. R. Kuyk, who was born in Utrecht of generations of good old Dutch ancestry, has honored her pedigree in the courage and tenacity of purpose with which she has made of herself a capable singing with such zeal and industry that last spring, wishing to sing with the Wednesday Club, and being unable to attend rehearsals, her preparation of the music was done so perfectly that only the last two rehearsals of the club were necessary. Any one recalling the music of this program of the Wednesday Club—the Hora Novissima, etc.—will appreciate this feat by so young a musician. Miss Jones is a daughter of Dr. Jones, of Ashland, and belongs to Virginia by long descent, with the added advantage of that strain of Semitic blood which has stood for talent and genius down the long args of which she has made of herself a capable musician already, since graduating in the High School. With piano and harmony lessons from Mr. Hahr, and organ lessons from Mr. Ernest Cosby, she has been a competent teacher of piano and organist for five years past, and upon this foundation the study of sight-singing and voice culture has come to round out the structure.

culture has come to round out the struc-ture of musical education. Miss Kuyk possesses a voice of such unusual promise Miss Kuyk. that I am preparing her to go abroad for further study.

Miss Jean Ruffin Feild, born of well-known Virginia ancestry, received her first lessons in music and literature at Sunnyside, a school in her native county, old Mecklenburg, kept by the Misses old Mecklenburg, kept by the Misses Carrington, whose pupils all over the State testify to their thoroughness and general scholarliness. Coming to make her home in Richmond with her sister, Mrs. Lewis Blair, her piano study was pursued with Mrs. Smith Brockenbrough. This included the study of harmony and literature of music. Miss Feild's study of singing and sight-singing with me having had from the first the aim of teaching, as well as the development of her voice, and having been covered by a comparator of time. Legard her as a young woman of tively short period of time, I regard her as a young woman of unusual capacity, fit team-mate for the other two of my trio of sight-singing instructors, Miss Kuyk and-

and ten selected passages of music to be read at sight. Accordingly, the work of supplementing the knowledge Accordingly, the work of supplementing the knowledge of music, which every applicant for voice lessons needs, by regular and systematic instruction in the art of sight-reading, will be done by these three assistants from now on. Their qualifications as teachers of sight-singing having been achieved by thorough study and with constant examples in the how and why of things coming up in the daily work of my studio, my confidence and satisfaction in them as co-teachers are
